SAFETY RECORD AWARDED FOR THE 5TH CONSECUTIVE YEAR

Clarke Energy has won the prestigious safety award from the British Safety Council for the 5th consecutive year. Clarke Energy is the exclusive UK distributor of GE Jenbacher gas powered engines with installations spanning the length and breadth of Britain. It is one of about 1,000 winners from large and small enterprises all over the country in the public and private sectors. A tough test was faced in order to satisfy the independent awards panel.

Winners must have lower than average accident rates, good safety policies and safety plans and commitment to health and safety at the highest board level. They must detail their health and safety officers' qualifications and provide details of significant advances in health and safety for the year, plus notification of any impending health and safety legal action.

Mr David Ballard, Director General of the British Safety Council, says "The National Safety Awards highlight organisations that reach top levels of health and safety. They are a mark of a proven and significant achievement in safety standards. By making safety an important feature of everyday work practice, Clarke Energy is reducing accidents and ill health while improving productivity and profitability."

Prime minister Tony Blair sent a message to winners via his office: "I send my congratulations to all of those organisations being represented today with a National Safety Award by the British Safety Council. These awards recognise the crucial success that these organisations and their employers have achieved in their pursuit of excellence in the management of health, safety and environmental matters. I welcome this opportunity to publicly recognise the valuable contribution that the British Safety Council makes in promoting health, safety and environmental best practice."
